the bipolar Homunculus nebula surrounding Eta Carinae as mapped by new ESO VLT/X-Shooter observations of the H 2 = 2:12125 m emission line. Our results re-veal for the rst time important deviations from the axisymmetric bipolar morphology: 1) circumpolar trenches in each lobe positioned point-symmetrically from the center

We discuss the comparative spatial morphology of the bipolar lobes, the "skirt" defined by the equatorial ejecta, and the bright features in the core. We derive separate color temperature values of 200, 240, and 420 K for the bipolar lobes, skirt, and core, respectively.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION General morphology of scales Each individual scale is broad and leaf-like (Fig. 2), and its middle carina is similar to the midrib of a plant leaf. Lateral carinae originate from the middle
