Community Reviews. The Woman of Rome, is told from the point of view of a prostitute. Moravia's skillful chronicle of the moral education of Adriana, an impressionable and essentially kind woman, remains potent, its naturalism complicated by excursions in voyeurism. Moravia has incorporated in his world the soul of women,...

Summary. Her lips are red and full, her breasts high and firm. Her mother, a poor sewing woman, thinks of Adriana as her only capital; the family has been poverty-stricken since the illness and death of the father. Adriana's mother does not conceal her opinion that their poverty can be traced to her marriage and to Adriana's unwanted birth.

ROMAN Roman costume was adopted from the Greek and was practically the same. The under-garment of the Roman woman was the Ionian chiton, or tunic; and the over-mantle was the Greek himation, called palla or stola. For men there was a tunic similar to that worn by the Greek, but in place of the himation, the Roman wore a toga.
